The European Court of Human Rights will hold a hearing in Strasbourg in the first six cases brought against Russia arising out of the situation in Chechnya, on Thursday 14 October 2004¹. The six applicants are represented by lawyers at the Russian human rights organisation, *Memorial*², together with lawyers from the London-based European Human Rights Advocacy Centre (EHRAC)³.

The applicants allege that their relatives were killed or injured by the Russian military in Chechnya in 1999 or 2000, in violation of the right to life (Article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights) and the prohibition of torture and inhuman and degrading treatment (Article 3). Two cases⁴ concern the circumstances surrounding the deaths of five of the applicants' relatives⁵ in Grozny at the end of January 2000. The mutilated bodies of the applicants' relatives were found with numerous stab and gunshot wounds in the Staropromyslovskii district of Grozny. The applicants claim their relatives were the victims of torture and extra-judicial killings at the hands of the Russian armed forces.

Three applications⁶ arise out of the Russian military's aerial bombing of a convoy of civilian cars, as the residents of Grozny tried to avoid the fighting there on October 29, 1999. The Government has admitted that the attack was carried out by two SU-25 military planes, firing air-to-ground rockets. As a result of the bombing, the first applicant was wounded and her two children and daughter-in-law were killed⁷; the second applicant was wounded by shells in the neck, arm and hip; and the third applicant's car containing her family's possessions was destroyed.

The sixth application concerns the Russian military's aerial and artillery bombardment of the village of Katyr-Yurt on 4 February 2000. As a result of the bombing, the applicant's son and her three nieces were killed⁸. The Government has admitted that the attack was carried out by two SU-25 planes, firing FAB-250 bombs.

The applicants in all six cases also allege that their right to an effective national remedy (Article 13) has been violated. The applicants have submitted that the investigations into the deaths of their relatives were ineffective since all the investigations have been closed or suspended without the perpetrators having been identified and appropriate action having been taken against them.

Four of the applicants will attend Thursday's hearing in Strasbourg: Magomed Khashiyev, Roza Akayeva, Libkan Bazayeva, and Zara Isayeva.

On Tuesday 12 October 2004, the Memorial Human Rights Centre is holding a press conference at the Independent Press Centre, Moscow.
