Amendments to a draft act

In amendments by Parliament, amendments to draft acts are highlighted in bold italics. Highlighting in normal italics is an indication for the relevant departments showing parts of the draft act which may require correction when the final text is prepared – for instance, obvious errors or omissions in a language version. Suggested corrections of this kind are subject to the agreement of the departments concerned.

The heading for any amendment to an existing act that the draft act seeks to amend includes a third line identifying the existing act and a fourth line identifying the provision in that act that Parliament wishes to amend.

Passages in an existing act that Parliament wishes to amend, but that the draft act has left unchanged, are highlighted in bold. Any deletions that Parliament wishes to make in such passages are indicated thus: [...].

"7. By way of derogation from paragraph 6, service weapons, ammunition and equipment may be used in legitimate self-defence and in legitimate defence of guest officers or of other persons, in accordance with the national law of the host Member State and with the principles of necessity and proportionality."
In the current situation Member States can use force in accordance with the national law of the host Member State, and by adding the principle of necessity and proportionality the intention is to put conditions on the use of arms in any FRONTEX operation. In many MS such principle is included into the rules on the use of force by the authorities, but not in all.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

One of the attributes of a common EU area of freedom, security and justice is that of the removal of internal borders, especially within the Schengen area. In turn, this has rendered the external borders of EU Member States a matter of common concern and has made the need for an integrated management of external borders ever more compelling.

With 42,672 km of external sea borders and 8,826 km of land borders, the Schengen free-movement area comprises 25 countries (including three non-EU states) enabling free internal travel for nearly half a billion people across the continent. The abolition of internal borders has facilitated freedom of movement for citizens in an unprecedented manner.

But this calls for a coordinated approach in securing external borders. And whereas external borders remain open and efficient for bona fide travellers and for people who need protection, they must be closed for cross-border crime and for other illicit activities.

An integrated management ensuring a uniform and high level of control and surveillance is therefore necessary. This calls for an adoption and implementation of common rules and also calls for increased cooperation between Member States in securing their external borders. More combined effort is needed and more pooling of resources.

Crucially, cooperation must be based on solidarity among Member States, especially with frontier Member States that, owing to their geographic or demographic situation, face severe migratory pressures at their borders. The deployment in October 2010 of the first Frontex Rapid Border Intervention Teams (RABITS), at the request of Greece in the light of its emergency situation at its border with Turkey, is a case in point.

It is in the light of this need for more coordination and solidarity that the Frontex agency plays an important role.

The Agency was set up in 2004 and became operational in 2005. Over the past five years, the Agency has faced a rapidly changing scenario in migratory flows at the Union’s external borders. It has grown into a compliment of more than 200 staff and has been active in several land, air and sea joint operations. But its effectiveness has not reached expected levels.

We must learn from these first years of experience and give the Agency a renewed mandate with more resources and more tools to become more effective.

As requested by the Hague programme, the Commission presented a Communication on the evaluation and future development of the FRONTEX Agency adopted on 13 February 2008. The situation of the Frontex agency was addressed in European Parliament resolutions concerning immigration, the Pact on Immigration and Asylum and in the Stockholm Programme. The general message in each of these documents was that a number of aspects of the Agency needed to be improved.

A recurring problem was that Frontex was too dependent on Member States for the deployment of personnel and equipment in missions coordinated by the Agency. The participation of the Member States had been patchy and pledges for equipment have been low. These shortcomings have seriously hampered the efficiency of the Agency. Another problem was the lack of cooperation from third countries.

On its part, the European Parliament has consistently supported the Agency, notably through significant budget increases over the years to support Frontex operations. Parliament has also repeatedly called for improvements in the Agency’s enabling legislation in order to address its shortcomings and improve its efficiency.

The proposal presented by the Commission is a step towards improving the agency in the light of the experience of its first years of operation. It provides amendments that are necessary to ensure a better defined mandate and an improved functioning of the Agency in the coming years.

The rapporteur welcomes the Commission proposals and hopes to improve them through a series of amendments that are contained in this report.

The future of the Frontex agency

The rapporteur believes that we have to clearly determine what we want from Frontex and what shape we want it to take in the coming years. The Treaty of Lisbon, the Stockholm Programme and the proposed Single Market Act all confirm that Europe is aiming to achieve a single area of freedom, security and justice for the benefit of its citizens. In this regard we have to make sure that the mechanisms concerned with this area live up to these ambitions. Frontex is no exception and its enabling law must be changed to ensure that it is better equipped to play its role.

Frontex should therefore be the European external border agency that coordinates common EU action in relation to the external borders of EU Member States. In particular, Frontex should be ready to assist Member States in circumstances requiring increased technical and operational assistance at external borders, especially those Member States facing specific and disproportionate pressures. In so doing, the Agency should embody European solidarity whereby pooled resources from different Member States should be brought together to support Member States in difficulties or particular points at the Union’s external border which are vulnerable or which require concerted action.

Frontex should work hand-in-hand with other European agencies, notably Europol and Eurojust in the fight against cross-border crime. And it should also work hand-in-hand with the European Asylum Support Office in order to ensure that third-country nationals who seek protection in the EU manage to access Europe's asylum system through proper, legitimate means.

Frontex also has to be available at all times when needed, including in situations of emergency. Europe can no longer look on powerless at emergency situations because it is unable to muster resources or pool assets. Frontex must therefore have the necessary means and equipment to deliver in a timely and efficient manner and that its legislation is up to date for it to deliver this purpose.

Your rapporteur believes that Frontex should therefore be able to bring together national border guards from different EU Member States in a pool of EU border guards or indeed, a EU Border Guard System. This pool should be drawn up for the purposes of joint operations, rapid border intervention missions and pilot projects involving the Agency and all Member States should be required to participate. The Agency must also support this pool through specialised training and other initiatives. The system could be an embryonic structure which could, in future, be developed into a fully-fledged EU Border Guard Agency.

Fundamental Rights

Like all other EU agencies and bodies, Frontex has the duty to observe and uphold fundamental rights in all realms of its affairs. Your rapporteur welcomes the numerous elements in the Commission proposal which underline the importance of fundamental rights and which strengthen the ability and obligation of Frontex to ensure that respect for such rights is an integral part of border management.

Proposed Amendments

In the light of the above, your rapporteur is proposing amendments to the Frontex regulation in order to achieve the following:

1. Strengthen the provisions on fundamental human rights.

2. Merge the articles providing for the setting up of Frontex Joint Support Teams and Rapid Border Intervention teams into one article providing for a EU Border Guard System which will consist of a pool of national border guards that can be tapped by the Agency for the purposes of its joint operations, rapid border intervention missions and pilot projects. This will streamline the provisions of the regulation, increase transparency, avoid duplication and confusion of roles and most importantly, give a clearer European identity to the Agency’s missions.

3. Support the Commission's proposal to require Member State to participate in the EU Border Guard System through national border guards of their own, the compulsory-solidarity clause - and to equip the Agency with the means to purchase or lease its own equipment.

4. Mandate the Agency to pay special attention to Member States which are facing specific and disproportionate burdens on their national asylum systems.

5. Tighten the timeframes within which rapid border intervention missions should be deployed. All deadlines for action are reduced so that rapid border interventions can truly cater for emergency situations.

6. Introduce a role for Frontex in assisting with voluntary returns over and above the role of the agency for other returns.

7. Introduce a reference to regional operational offices based on the recent experience of the opening of the first regional operational office in Greece.
8. Grant the Agency the power to process personal data in order to enable it to play a greater role in combating cross-border crime and irregular migration. At the same time, provide for due safeguards on the protection of personal data. Thus, data should be processed for limited purposes, namely for situations regarding persons whom there are reasonable grounds to suspect involvement in cross-border criminal activities, in irregular migration activities or in human trafficking activities, persons who are victims of such activities and whose data may lead to the perpetrators of such illegal activities as well as persons who are subject to return operations in which the Agency is involved. There should be strict criteria as to how this data should be handled.

9. Increase the democratic scrutiny of the Agency by giving the European Parliament a greater role to monitor the work of the Agency, including on its working arrangements with third countries.

10. Require the review of the Agency’s mandate, in five years, to analyse the further development of the EU Border Guard System.
